Texas A&M's CMS Showcase

Texas seems to be a popular state with Hannon Hill these past couple of months, with the signing of Texas A&M Health Science Center and the City of Irving. Now Hannon Hill has been invited to present at Texas A&M University's CMS Showcase Feb. 26th - March 2nd. Texas A&M is undergoing a branding overhaul and part of this initiative includes a directive to investigate possible CMS integration for the major academic units (colleges) and their respective departments. U-Web (Texas A&M University Webmasters' Guild) has invited several CMS vendors to come and discuss their products with Texas A&M webmasters to give them a feel for what's available. While our sales department is quite accustomed to filling out RFP's and doing onsite demos to help organizations in their decision making, I'm pretty impressed by Texas A&M's dedication to bringing all of its academic units together. Successful implementation of any CMS is dependent on thorough planning, cooperation, and organization. It looks like Texas A&M is on the right track with this Showcase, and I expect to see other large universities follow suit. Learn more about Texas A&M's CMS Showcase at http://uweb.tamu.edu/CMS_Showcase. Thanks for inviting us!
